WE have certainly some curiosity to know. who it may be who so persistently sends communication to the Pall Mall Gazette calculated to raise the greatest fears of the warlike capabilities of the Chinese. We have on several occasions noticed these ingenious communications, in which it is impossible not to perceive a persistency of design which mah-tee Ferry Boat Company. She is a neat shows great anxiety on the part of the writer, and trim little craft, and on her arrival made to establish his point. His first essay on the subject was a reference to the performances of Gordon's Forces in China, and a warning as to the enormous prowess of the Chinese and the great difficulty which we might have in contending against it. Similar contributions evidently from the same pen have since that time made their appearance in the same paper, and it is evident that we may look for a periodical dose of his friendly warning to the bay off the "Novelty Iron Works," ready the British nation of the dangers which to take in her second hand boilers. Her hull would await it were it to become engaged in hostilities with the brave sons of the Coles - the owner and her boilers are a set which tial Empire

In a late number of the Pall Mall, there appears another warning of the same kind which displays a somewhat amusing ignerance of Chinese affairs on the part of that paper. On the basis of some ridiculous quasi prophesy which Mr. Cooper mentioned in his "Travels of a Pioneer of Commerce," to the effect that there were to be four question immediately went back a few paces, "Tsu" wars, the last being against the "Yan-kwei-Tsu," the Pall Mall rakes up and old passage from ABBE Huc's travels published close upon ten years ago, and oracularly informs its readers that it is "almost startling when read in connection with Mr Coorer's note." The Pall Mall would have done well to obtain some little reliable infor mation on this subject before opening its columns to this vapid contribution, and spreading unnécessary alasm among stendy. going people at home, who know nothing more about China than that it is the country from which they get their Tea. does not say much for Mr. Coopen's Ainguistic powers that in penning the note which has caused such alarm to our home contemporary, he did not stop to consider the ridiculousness of talking about the four Tou wars-seeing that the Tsu or Tse in question is nothing more nor less than a particle literally meaning a son, and affixed in colloquial Chinese to nouns innumerable. The significance of the prophecy on which Mr. Coopen made his note will be best understood by readers at home by their imagining that some sage, in discoursing of the political state of Europe, had spoken of the German, the Englishman and the Russianclearly indicative of difficulties concerning the central Asian question. It would be too much to expect the Pall Mall to know that "Yang-kwai-tsu" does not mean foreigners, but is the slang term literally meaning " foreign devil." which is used to designate Europeans in the Celestial Empire-and that if any of the ordinary expressions for foreigner had been used, it would not end with a Ten, and consequently could have nothing to do with the four wars, in the last

That there exists an anti-foreign party who for abolishing Church Patronnge in Scotland. would be glad to urge on a war against foreigners, and that the armament which has of late years being going on calls for some watchfulness is not to be denied; but that in Vatican. the event of a war actually breaking out between a foreign nation and Uhina, there would be anything to cause alarm as to ble complete ability of the former to cope with it, cannot be believed by any who are

In France, I fancy that matters are proceeding very unsatisfactorily indeed. The Legitimists openly aver that when they voted for MacMabon's seven years term of office, they were distinctly promised that he would resign the instant the vote of the Assembly could be obtained in favour of restoration, and this averment is no doubt true. That vote would ! have been secured in fayor of the Comte de Chambord, if he would have sanctioned the be recorded and her statement taken. He is very much disliked even by his own party, but he has gone so fur, and got things into such a guard, that if the Republicans haply, With his guilt or his inmocence of the assault got the upper hand, they would surely retaliate. Consequently, the Ultramontanes keep the Duc Broglie in case a worse calamity should befa them. But they have set their hearts on some scheme of restoration, and it is clear MacMabon's resignation is required. Comto de Chambord is certainly at Versailles, notwithstanding the assertions to the contrary The Ultramoutanes do not like the Duc Broglie's upper chamber solemb. If they abstain or vote against it, the measure must b rejected, and they will cortainly not vote with out some understanding. As the majority in the chamber are at direct variance with the existence of the assembly beyond both the period and the contingency for which it was elect. ed, it is difficult to exaggerate the importance of the situation or to realise how bistory will people, and not the panacea for which M? M. Huo says :-

It may be that it would be possible to find inthe most formidable army in the world. Chinese are intelligent, ingenious, and docile, They comprehend rapidly whatever they are laught, and retain it in their memory. They are persevering, astonishingly active when they choose to exert themselves, respectful to author rity, submissive and obedient, and they would easily accommodate themselves to all the exigencies of the severest discipline. The Chinese possess also a quality most precious in soldiers, and which can scarcely be found as well developed in any other people-namely, an incomparable power of supporting privations of every kind. We have often been astonished to see bow they bear hunger, thirst, heat, cold, the stood to be obvious from the letters received difficulties and fatigues of a long march as if that Mr. Dawson has been very closely they were mere play. Thus, both morally and watched this time. As, however, the King physically, they seem capable of meeting every lad been informed that the money to Mr. call which could be unde upon them, and with. Their own country would of an acknowledgment in simple terms of refurnish in abundance all the material ceipt, and then concluded something in this that could be desired, as well as workmen without number, quick at comprehending any new invention. China would present also inexhaustible resources for the formation of a navy. Without speaking of the vast extent of her coasts, of the numerous population which pass the greater part of their lives on the sea. - the great rivers and immense lakes in the interior, covered with fishing and trading junks, remember that the words, in fact, are-'Lest would alone furnish multitudes of men, habituated form their infancy to navigation, active, experienced, and capable of becoming excellent of intended treachery as perhaps ever passed sailors even for long voyages. The Chinese under circumstances of equal difficulty." will very soon build vessols on the model of those of Europe, and a few years would enable them to put to sea with such a fleet as has never been seen. No doubt the reader will think the notion of this immense army, this avaianche of men descending from the high table-land of Asia as in the time of Tobinggis-Khan, these innumerable Chinese vessels ploughing every son or yellow labels with letters printed upside direct from Calcutta. sea and blockading even our own ports, an expecdingly fantastic one, and we ourselves are far from thinking it likely to be realized. But when you become thoroughly acquainted with this empire of 400 millions of inhabitants, when you appreciate the rejources of these rich and fertile countries, you cannot but ask what should prevent such a nation from exercising a great influence upon the affairs of the whole human race. What is uceded is a man of genius, a man truly great, one capable of utilizing the power and vitality of this empire, more populous than all Europe, and which already reckons more than thirty centuries of civilization. Should an Emperor arise endowed with a great intellect and an iron will, determined to break at once with the ancient traditions and to foster among his subjects the progressive civilization of the

VALPARAISO, March 18th. On Monday, the 9th instant, it became generally known through this town that the Tacna, one of the coasting steamers of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, had capsized without warning, and 19 of the passengers and crew were drowned. The news caused a very painful sensation throughout the town, and flags were hoisted half-mast high in front of most of the business houses and on the flagstaffs of many private residences in the town. Since the loss of the Captain in a similar manner no accident of so terrible a nature has occurred. That a steamer belonging to one of the largest steam navigation companies, and believed to have left port well-found in every particular, should turn over in fair weather and suddenly leave passengers and crew at the meroy of the waves seems scarcely credible. A Court of Inquiry is now being held in this port, good native demand, sales amount to about 250. under the regulations established by the Board of Trade, and the result of the examination is awaited with much anxiety.

The effect of this alteration of the ship's course was to bring the wind on her starboard quarter, and then her list to port became observable. This managuvre, however, did not bring her up, and the captain and crew began to throw the deck cargo overboard. One of our correspondents with the expeditionary force in Ashantee thus describes an incident which was told in brief in a telegram China all the elements necessary for organizing published in the Daily News on Saturday last. He writes under date, Camp, Detobiosu, Jan. 29th:-"I do not know that a neater instance of a valuable hint, conveyed under circumstances of difficulty by an ingenious mon, has often been recorded. It appears that the lusttime the envoys were sent back to Coomassic a letter was also sent to Mr. Dawson, who has been a ouptive there ever since he was sent up to negotiate the deliverance of a German missionary. The letter was from Captain Butler, the head of the Intelligence Department, and simply contained a small sum of money, for which Mr. Dawson had naked by ways of something to live upon. It is underway. The King's letter accompanies this by the same messenger; please see 2 Cor., 2nd chap., 11th verse. Your readers may judge of the temptation it was to our officers, engaged in very serious business, receiving at such a moment a notice of this kind, to throw it aside as a pione ejaculation. It is novel enough to attract all foreigners, of every shape of religious opinion; while ritualists or high-church missionsries will be the cause of mortal uneasiness to those who doubtless rejoice over this public exhibition of the sacred monograms. The heathen Japanese QUILTS. does not appear to have the remotest idea of the significance of his triliteral trade mark. which he has doubtless copied from some prayer-book, though possibly he may have been attending the English church at Yokohama. The mark we refer to consists of the three letters I. R. S. which are laid upon each other to form a monogram, as in the churches. The enterprising native has it printed in red letters on his black out-door shop-curtain, and, inside, it flants on many a box of cheap foreign merchandize. Any one who walks up the main street in Tokio, north of Kiyo Bashi, on the eastern side, many enjoy a fine opportunity of studying the vagaries of modern enterprise in Japan: Can the force of imitation further go ?

WICKED JIM A TEMPERANCE RHAPSODY. There were maidens ancient and gaunt and grim, And maidens of fairer face, There were angular women, with optics direct And women with eyes ablaze: There were men with scap-locks and am'rous lear, And men out at elbows and knees, [The shepherds were those of such goodly cheer,

And the drunkards reformed were these. Besieged the saloon of "The Laden Vine" Of a wicked old sinner called Jim, And they ranged themselves up in a dolorous line And they sang him a delorous hymn: "You're a sinner," they sang, " you're a naughty old man For your wickedness you must atone, You're a toper terrific; you're under a ban,"

[And the shepherds came in with a groan.] Their faces were long as the moral law. And their metre was longer still, With tireless lungs and a tireless jaw. They sang with a right good will You're a brand to be placked; you're a sheep latray, But there's hope for a sinner yet ; Reform and return to a better way,

And a sweeter reward you'll get." And the hardened sinner whose name was Jim. The host of "The Laden Vine," Was melted to tears by the watning hymn, And he emptiod the may wine And the yellow rum and the pearly gir Rere Bourbon and Old Rye, From cask and bottle and crowded bin
